

Doctor of Education (EdD) in Educational Practice Program Goals

What is the CPED vision for graduates of the Doctor of Education (EdD) in Educational Practice degree?

The Vision of the Carnegie Project on the Education Doctorate (CPED) is to inspire all schools of education to apply the CPED framework to the preparation of educational leaders to become well-equipped scholarly practitioners who provide stewardship of the profession and meet the educational challenges of the 21st century.

A graduate of the program should:

- generate solutions to complex problems of practice that are equitable, ethical, and socially just;
- construct and apply knowledge to make a positive difference in educational environments;
- demonstrate collaboration and communication skills in working with diverse communities and in building partnerships;
- possess a professional knowledge base that integrates practical and research knowledge;
- link theory with systemic and systematic inquiry;
- generate, transform, and use professional knowledge and practice; and
- understand the value and function of building a community of practice.
